The Journal of Law, Medicine & Ethics, a leading multidisciplinary academic journal now in its 48th year of publication, is accepting proposals for special symposium issues of the journal.
JLME publishes four regular issues and two supplemental issues every year, with each issue focusing on a specific topic. Symposia can be generated from any number of sources, such as papers first presented at a conference, the product of a funded grant, or simply a collection of manuscripts on a single topic. Recent topics include the opioid crisis, health research using mobile devices, healthcare reform, and challenges of microbiome-based therapies.

JLME guest editors are recognized experts in the topic of the symposium. Guest editors will send the invitations to potential authors, organize the call for papers, and work with our editorial staff to manage the peer review process.

As JLME is a multidisciplinary publication that is read by specialists from many different backgrounds and fields, we recommend symposium papers be written with a broad audience in mind.

A JLME issue can consist of up to 200 double-spaced Microsoft Word pages (or similar), including notes. The average issue consists of 10 diverse articles, but symposia can also consist of as few as 4-6 articles. The standard cost of a symposium is $20,000, used to defray cost of publishing. Proposals that do not include the full cost considered but may be given lower priority.

Proposals Should:
- Be two pages
- Contain information on the proposed topic of the symposium
- Explain why the topic is important
- Say why the submitter would be an appropriate guest editor
- List potential contributors and their topics.

Proposals will be accepted on a rolling basis and can be considered at any time. Email your submission to Ted Hutchinson at thutchinson@aslme.org.
